The 1746 Dress Act and its the effect on the culture of the Gaidhealtachd

Over the past few years I have had discussions with many folks online (usually on Facebook groups) about the ‘tartan ban’, of which there seems to be a general misapprehension. I would like to put that right today by sharing my research with you on the subject.

The Dress Act, part of the Act of Proscription (19 Geo. 2, c.39), came into force in Scotland on 1st August 1746. Section 16 of the Act made the wearing of “Highland clothes (that is to say) the Plaid, Philabeg, or little Kilt, Trowse, Shoulder-belts, or any part whatever of what peculiarly belongs to the Highland Garb; and that no tartan or party-coloured plaid of stuff shall be used for Great Coats or upper coats” illegal with the penalty of the first offence six months’ imprisonment, or a second offence transportation to the colonies for seven years. Previously, sumptuary laws had been enforced to reinforce social hierarchies, but the Act of Proscription had much different goal; to enable the destruction of the clan system and to bring the Highlands under full control of the British. Unlike the disarming elements of the Act of Proscription which only applied to the Highlands of Scotland, the Dress Act applied to the whole of Scotland. However, as we will see later the law was unfairly applied and did indeed end up only being enforced on the lower classes of society. It was also only applied in some areas, with others being more lenient than others as we shall see later on. The Act was eventually repealed on 1st July 1782 with a proclamation issued in English and Gaelic.
Since the 1715 Jacobite uprising, tartan had become firmly associated with the Jacobite army despite the fact that a great number of Jacobite soldiers were not from the Highlands and the wearing of mixed tartans were very common, as can be seen in figure 1. (Scott 2018: 18 & 23)

![Figure 1: detail from Morier, David (1745) An Incident in the Rebellion of 1745 (accessed from https://www.rct.uk/collection/401243/an-incident-in-the-rebellion-of-1745 on 2 December 2018)]](image)

David Morier's An Incident in the Rebellion of 1745 (figure 1) was commissioned by the Duke of Cumberland a few months after the Hanoverian victory at Culloden, clearly as a celebration of his victory. The painting depicts the battle at Culloden and Morier used imprisoned Jacobite soldiers for his models (as well as British soldiers). The painting was given as a gift to Cumberland's father, George II, and remains in the Royal collection. Along with the blue bonnet and the white cockade, tartan clothing was seen as a part of the Jacobite ‘uniform’ and this was certainly the perception in England where caricatures portrayed Jacobites as thieving, lice-ridden savages who ate children (Craig, 2017) and ransacked villages, murdered men and dogs, and raped women (figure 2).

Figure 2: detail from Van Duivel, Kind (1745) The Highland Visitors (accessed from www.loc.gov/pictures/item/91727491/ on 4th December 2018)

Hugh Cheape argues that “tartan and Highland dress, bracketed with weapons, had come to be regarded as an outward and visible manifestation of Jacobitism and continuing loyalty to the Stuart dynasty in exile and, so, political treachery and lawlessness” (Cheape 2010: 449/6575). Pittock confirms that tartan was seen as a uniform rather than an ethnic identifier following the ’45, and that tartan was chosen as the uniform of the Jacobites between the uprisings of 1689-1746 (Pittock, 2010: 920-970/6575).

Tartan was frequently parodied in both English satirical portraits of Highlanders and Prince Charles Edward, as well as used in plays on the London stage mocking Highlanders. A contemporary satirical engraving of the Prince was clearly designed to mock Highland dress (figure 3). Scott supports this by arguing that visitors to the Highlands, whom she refers to as contemporary observers, were made to feel uncomfortable by Highland dress as it subverted 18th century norms of the Western European male’s attire of an early form of the three-piece suit (Scott, 2018: 27).

Although tartan was included in the Act of Proscription because it was seen as the uniform of militarised minor cultural group by the dominant culture, it was also a form of dress which was at odds with the rest of the country/Western Europe. However, the reason behind the ban on the ‘Highland garb’ only applying to males and not females is clearly down to its identification as a military uniform.

Bishop Robert Forbes compiled Lyon In Mourning between 1747 and 1775, which was eventually published in 1895 by the Scottish History Society. His aim was to record the 1745 Jacobite uprising from first-hand accounts and also to document what happened afterwards. The second volume of Lyon in Mourning contains an astonishing story from Edinburgh, 20th December 1746, about a raid on tartan dresses ordered by the Justice Clerk and Lord Albemarle, who was an aide to the Duke of Cumberland and appointed as the general in charge of restoring order in Scotland (Forbes, 1895, ii: 111). Lord Albemarle was angered that the ladies of Edinburgh had gathered to have a ball in Prince Charles Edward’s honour on his birthday and perhaps the ‘raid on the tartan dresses’ was more about suppressing celebration of the Prince rather than tartan per se. The rumours of a ball were an elaborate joke designed to mock the British government. However, an unfortunate Mrs Jean Rollo was arrested for wearing a tartan dress but was later dismissed. She is the only woman known to have been arrested for wearing tartan during the period, however, there are cases of men being imprisoned. There is no reference to anyone ever being transported.

There are quite a few songs written about the Act (which can all reasonably be assumed to have been written in the latter part of 1746/in 1747). Perhaps the most cherished Gaelic song from this period was written by Alasdair MacMhaighstir Alasdair (Alexander MacDonald); Am Breacan Uallach (The Proud Plaid). MacDonald was the Gaelic tutor of Prince Charles Edward during the ’45 and was also an officer in the Jacobite army. It is therefore unsurprising that he would be a very vocal critic of the Dress Act. His twenty-six-verse song Am Breacan Uallach, (full lyrics and translation in Appendix 1) starts with a romantic, nostalgic description of Highland dress. He talks in the first three verses about how much he enjoyed wearing Highland dress before turning to how practical the clothing was for a soldier in verses 4 and 5. Verse nine talks about how admired Highland dress was by ladies, particularly at weddings and MacDonald continues with discussing the practicalities and the beauty of Highland dress before, at line 60, expressing his anger: “Cha Rìgh am fear a chuir as duit” (No King was he who thee forbade). The next two verses deal with how the Gaels have only been made stronger and refer to the Prince before the incredibly beautiful 19th verse which likens the Gaels’ relationship with the Prince to that of a firmly waulked cloth. Verse 22 directly discusses the Act of Proscription, stating that the Act hasn’t changed anything, and the Gaels are still loyal to their Prince, a quality that they got from their fathers (verse 23). Verse 25 directly addresses the Prince, wishing him well, before the final verse 26 addresses the Duke of Cumberland and states that he will end up in hell. It is clear that in this song MacDonald has drawn together the full range of emotions that were felt by the Gaels at that period in time; nostalgia for a past that clearly was not going to return, pride in the Gaelic way of life, anger at the British (and particularly the Duke of Cumberland) and a longing for the Prince to return.

Although Gaels understood the requirement to give up their arms, they did not accept the requirement to give up a costume in which they had considerable pride (Dunbar, 1981: 51). He further states that: “This was an imposition of personal shame and they reacted with indignation – particularly the clans which had been loyal to the Government.” (Dunbar, 1981: 51). This indignation is evident in Rob Don MacKay’s Oran nan Casagan Dubha (Song of the Black Coats). Rob Donn, who was uneducated and illiterate, was a great storyteller and songwriter from Sutherland who did not fight in the ’45 although he was a supporter of the British government. In his song, he issues a strong critique of the Act of Proscription and also of the British government/King George II. He was summoned to appear before the authorities for sedition after the publication of the song (Campbell 1933:234). In the second verse of the song, MacKay directly addresses King George II by asking if he wanted to mock his supporters in Scotland to ‘double their bondage’ (by introducing the Dress Act). Verses 11 and 12 are particularly striking; Rob Donn is appealing directly to the Prince to return and in verse 13 he says that he is ready to fight for the Prince. In the final few lines, MacKay appeals directly to God to make a judgment.

Although marginalised, Gaelic women did have an opinion on the Dress Act which is reflected in Margaret Campbell’s poem An t-Éideadh Gaidhealach / The Highland Dress (attached as Appendix 3). Campbell’s poem, which must have been written sometime between April and August 1746 (line 10), and although she shares the same indignation as the male poets and songwriters, she discusses the Dress Act from a female perspective. The Dress Act did not apply to women, so the poet is writing on behalf of her community. The seventh verse talks about how men will no longer be able to show off their fine legs as they will be required to wear woollen stockings. She refers to how men will no longer be attractive to women and that it will be the King who loses out in the end as he will not be able to tax dyestuffs (as opposed to discussing loyalty).

It is probable that a large number of men were arrested for wearing tartan in the few years following the enforcement of the Act of Proscription, but only a few are recorded in the literature on Highland dress, most comprehensively by Dunbar (1962 and 1981). Dunbar states that he could not find any evidence of the Act before enforced before 1748, but an Army order of December 1748 changed the situation. Highlanders who were under suspicion of being rebels were made to swear an oath and anyone caught wearing tartan should be taken to the nearest magistrate, in the tartan clothing, for trial. In his History of Highland Dress, Dunbar discusses four different trials where men were arrested and imprisoned for wearing tartan; two Highlanders were arrested and imprisoned in Edinburgh in August and September 1749 for wearing philabegs, Oronoce – a black servant (slave?) of the Laird of Appin- was arrested and imprisoned for wearing tartan livery, and a farmer named John MacKay from Strathnaiver in Sutherland who was arrested for wearing a plaid and tartan coat and in front of a magistrate within two hours of arriving in Inverness in October 1751 (Dunbar: 1962: 6-7). In his defence MacKay stated that he had never heard of the Act of Proscription, as he lived in a remote part of the country and was only in Inverness to attend a market. Hugh Cheape quotes a report from a Captain Hughes of General Pulteney’s Regiment dated 15th October 1749: “Duncan Campbell and his son, inhabitants of Glen Falloch, were apprehended in Highland Cloaths by the moving Parole and are confined in the Tollbooth of Killin” (Cheape 1995: 32). Cheape adds that there were many similar arrests but that soldiers enforcing the Act sometimes struggled to know whether the law was being broken (Cheape 1995: 33).
The policing of the Act was not equally enforced across the whole of Scotland. Grant and Cheape discuss how the districts of Rannoch, Glencoe, Lochaber, Glengarry, Knoydart, Glenmoriston and Laggan in Badenoch had been chosen by the British in 1747 for ‘thorough supervision and disarmament’, but that local magistrates and justices of the peace were as lenient as possible and accepted excuses for why the men had been found in Highland dress such as they were wearing women’s plaids, a plaid had been overdyed or a kilt sewn up the centre was actually a pair of trews (Grant and Cheape 1997:206)

In 1755, the Forfeited Estates Commission ordered a census to be taken on the estates it managed on behalf of the king. Factors of the estates were asked a large number of questions to report upon, including ‘Whether the laws prohibiting the Highland dress have taken full effect in that Estate’. The reports back to the Commissioners of the Annexed Estates on the whole stated that the ‘laws prohibiting the Highland dress’ had taken full effect with the exception of the barony of Colgach in the parish of Lochbroom. The Government seems to have been reassured by the responses of their factors as by 1760 there were no longer any prosecutions for wearing Highland dress due to patrols being stopped and the proscription being relaxed (Dunbar 1962: 8).

The Dress Act never applied to two groups of men: the military and the gentry. The use of tartan by the British military is a fascinating subject which is too broad a subject to discuss here, except to mention that it was rather ingenious to allow Highland regiments that fought in the Seven Years War in North America to wear a tartan uniform when it was still banned in the Highlands. For example, the Fraser’s Highlanders regiment was formed in 1757 to fight in North America and their uniform included diced tartan hose, a traditional plaid and blue woollen bonnet (which all could arguably be described as ‘traditional’ Highland dress) along with a short redcoat (see figure 4 below).

Figure 4: contemporary sketch of the Fraser’s Highlanders uniform during the Seven Years War (accessed from https://i2.wp.com/www.military-history.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/04/WAS_Highlander_1745_web-185x300.jpg?resize=250%2C405 on 8th December 2018)

During the period of proscription, a large number of the gentry had portraits of themselves painted wearing tartan. John Campbell, who was the main cashier at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh, curiously had a portrait of himself painted by William Mossman in 1749 (figure 5). Although Campbell’s political affiliation is not known, it seems likely to assume that he may have been a supporter of the Jacobites due his aiding them to trade RBS bank notes for gold during the Jacobite occupation of Edinburgh in 1745iv. In the portrait, not only is Campbell wearing Highland dress but he is also fully armed. This therefore begs the question as to whether this portrait was intended to challenge the authority of the British government, perhaps particularly in relation to fiscal policy (the RBS bank note being very visible).

Figure 5: Mossman, William (1749) John Campbell of the Bank (accessed from https://www.rbs.com/heritage/people/john-campbell.html on 5th December 2018)

With the exception of Flora MacDonald, most people painted wearing tartan during the period of proscription were wealthy men such as John Campbell. A beautiful portrait of a young Helen Murray of Ochetyre exists, which was painted about 1750 and is the only known painting of a girl wearing tartan clothing during the period (MacDonald, 2014). One more portrait of children wearing tartan exists. In her book Damn Rebel Bitches, Maggie Craig discusses Lady MacDonald of Sleat, who had her sons, Sir James (hand on rifle) and Sir Alexander (holding golf club), painted wearing Highland dress in 1750 (figure 6). Craig states that: “the painting is unsigned because the artist was committing a criminal offence, as were the boys for wearing tartan and their mother for choosing to dress them in the Highland style.” (Craig, 1997: 3266/3416). This is not entirely accurate; there was no law against painting a portrait of someone wearing tartan, nor was there a law against a mother dressing her children in tartan. In fact, the only people officially in defiance of the Act were the boys themselves. The boys’ father, Macdonald of Macdonald, did not fight in the ’45 although it was known that their mother was from a Jacobite-supporting family. The notes on the painting on the National Galleries of Scotland website states that: “The Government was apparently keen to shield the Macdonald boys from disruptive Highland influence and both were sent to be schooled in England”; could the ‘disruptive Highland influence’ be their mother?
From the beginning of the 1760s there clearly was a shift in thinking about whether the Highlands still represented a threat to status quo. As mentioned above, regular military patrols were no longer active after 1760. Tartan was clearly being marketed and sold again; advertisements from the newspapers at the time in Edinburgh providing proof such as the following from the Caledonian Mercury in 1761 (the first advertisement to be found for plaids or tartans anywhere else in Scotland is Aberdeen on 15th July 1782, two weeks before the repeal of the Act). The Highlanders who once fought against the British government were now successfully fighting for the British in North America and they were no longer seen as a threat.
The Act of Proscription was eventually repealed on 1st August 1782, thanks to the efforts of the Highland Society of London, (given royal assent by George III on 1st July 1782) with a printed declaration issued in both Gaelic and English afterwards.

In summary, the ten years following the defeat of the Jacobites at Culloden were incredibly difficult times for the Gaels. Their traditional way of life was almost systematically eradicated thanks to the heavy-handed efforts of the Duke of Cumberland and the British state. Highland society was turned upside down by the removal of clan chiefs – who had traditionally been able to call men on their estates to fight- as hereditary proprietors of estates and turned them into British landlords concerned primarily with making money. The speaking of Gaelic – frequently referred to as Erse or the Irish language- was discouraged in favour of English and it is fair to claim that the dominant British culture aimed to reduce at best, or eradicate at worst, Gaelic culture. Although the Dress Act sought a removal of tartan as a signifier of a separate Gaelic identity, it was only temporary in its nature.
Bibliography

Craig, Maggie (2017) Fake News 18th century style available from http://www.scottishreview.net/MaggieCraig158b.html (accessed on 4th December 2018)

Scott, Jenn (2018) Better is the Proud Plaid. Warwick: Helion & Company

Scottish Record Office (1973) Reports on the Annexed Estates Edinburgh: HMSO
Appendix 1: Lyrics and translation of Alasdair Mac Mhaighstir Alasdair (1746/7) Am breacan uallach. Transcribed from Highland Songs of the ’45 (John Lorne Campbell)

Seist: Chorus
Hé clò dubh Hey, the black cloth
Hó clò dubh Ho, the black cloth
Hé clò dubh Hey, the black cloth
B’fhearr am breacan The plaid was better

1. Phearr liom breacan uallach
More I loved the proud plaid
Mu m’ghuaillibh, ’s a chur fo m’achlais
Beneath my arms & round my shoulders
Na ge do gheibhinn còta
Than any coat I could get
De’n chlò as fearr thig a Sasgunn
Though of the finest cloth from England

2. Mo laochan féin an t-éidadh
My favourite is the clothing
A dh’fheumadh an crios da ghasgadh
Which needs the girdle for its fastening
Cuaiseachadh éilidh
The plaid in folds a-flowing
D’éis éirigh gu dol air astar
When I arose to make my journey

3. Eileadh cruinn nan cuaichean,
The neat plaid of the drooping folds
Gur buadhail an t-earradh gaisgich;
That was a fitting dress for heroes
Shiubhlainn leat na fuarain
In thee I’d walk the streamlets
Fedh fhua-bheann; ‘s by gghasd’ air faich’ thù. When I arose to make my journey.

4. Fior-chulaidh an t-soighdeir,
True dress of the soldier
‘S neo-ghloceil ri h-uchd na caismeachd,
Practical, when sounds the war-cry
‘S ciatach ‘san adbhàns thù,
Graceful in the advance thou art
Fo shrannraich nam piob ‘s nam bratach
When bagpipes sound & banners flutter

5. Cha mhios’ anns an dol sios thù,
Thou’rt splendid too, when comes the charge
‘N uair sgriobar a duille claisich ;
And swords are drawn from scabbards
Fior-earradh na ruaige,
The finest garb to set the rout
Gu luas a chur anns na casaibh! And in the feet put swiftness

6. Bu mhaith go sealg an fhéidh thú; Thou wast good to hunt the deer in ‘N am éirigh do’n ghréin air creachann, When the sun arose o’er the hillside
Us dh’halbhainn leat gu lòthmhor And I would go lightly in thee
Di-Dòmhnaich a’dol do’n chlachan. Sunday morning churchwards

7. Laighinn leat gu ciorbail, Closely wrapped I’d lie in thee
‘S mar earbaig gum briosgainn grad leat, And like the roedeer spring up quickly
Na b’ullamh’ air m’armach Far readier to wield my arms
Na deargananch ‘s mosgaid ghlagach. Than the red coat with his clattering musket.

8. ‘N am coilich a bhith dùrdan When the black-cock’s murmuring
Air stùcan am maidinn dhealta, On a knolll in th’ dewy morning
Bu ghasda t’fheum ‘sa chuí sin ‘Twas finer then to use thee
Seach mùtan de thrusdar casaig. Than any dirty ragged black coat.

9. Shiubhlainn leat a phòsadh, In thee I’d go to weddings
‘S bharr feòrnein cha fhroisinn dealta; And never brush the dewy grass, B’ì siod an t-suanach bhoidheach, That was the handsome garment
An òg-bhean bu mhór a tachd dhisth. That dearly loved the bride to see.

10. B’aigeantach ‘sa choill’ thu, In woodlands thou was splendid Dam choibhreadh le d’bhlàths ‘s le t’fhsagadh To give me covering and warmth
O chathadh us o chrion-chur, From driven snow or Scots mist
Gun dìonadh to mì ri frasachd. Or showers thou wast my guard.

11. Air ‘uachdar gura sgiamhach Above thee, truly beautiful
A laigheadh an sgiath air a breacadh, Would lie the carved shield
‘S claidheamh air chrios ciatach, And the sword, on handsome belt
Air fhiaradh os cionn do phleata. Aslant thy pleated folds.
12. ‘S deas a thigeadh cuilbhear
Gu suilbheara leat fo ‘n asgail
‘S a dh’aindeoin uisg’ us urchaid,
No tuil-bheum gum biodh aiur fasgadh.

Well with thee would go my gun
Lightly beneath my arm
Thou wast my full protection
From rain and storm and every ill.

13. Bu mhaith anns an oidhch’tù,
Mo loinn thú mar aodach-leapa;
B’fhearr liom na ‘m beat-lìn thú –
As priseile mhin tha ‘n Glaschu.

Thou wast fine at night time
My choice thou was as bed clothes;
Better than the finest sheets
Of costly linen in Glasgow.

14. ‘S baganta, grin, bòidheach,
Air banais us air mòd am breacan;
Suas an éileadh-sguaibe,
‘S dealg-gualainn a’cur air fasdaidh.

Tidy, pretty, handsome
For wedding or for mod the tartan
Up the flowing plaid
With shoulder pin to fasten it!

15. Bu mhaith an là ‘s an oidhch’ thù,
Bha loinn ort am beinn ‘s an cladach;
Bu mhaith am feachd ‘s an sìth thù –
Cha Rìgh am fear a chuir as duit.

Thou art good by day or night time
And comely upon hill or sea shore
In hosting or in peace time
No King was he who thee forbade

16. Shaoil leis gun do mhaolaich so
Faobhar nan Gàidheal tapaidh,
Ach ’s ann a chuir e géir’orr’,
Na’s beurra na deud na h-ealtainn’.

He thought that thus he’d blunted
The keenness of the Gaels so valiant
But he has only made them
Still sharper than the edge of [a] razor

17. D’fhàg e iad làn mi-ruín,
Cho ciocrasach ri coin acrach;
Cha chaisg doeach an iotadh,
Ge b’fhion è, ach fior-fhuill Shagsuinn.

He’s left them full of malice
As ravenous as dogs-a-starving
No draught can quench their thirst now
Of any wine, save England’s life-blood.

18. Ged spion sibh an cridhe asaîn
‘S ar braillchean sios a shracadh

Though you tear our hearts out
And rend apart our bosoms
Cha toir sibh asainn Teàrlach
Gu bràth gus an téid ar tachdadh.

Never shall you take Prince Charles
From us, till we’re a-dying.

19.R’ar n-anam tha e fuaighte
Teann-luaidhte cho cruaidh ri glasan,
‘S uainn cha n-fhaodar ‘fuasgladh,
Gu ‘m buainear am fear ud asainn.

To our souls he’s woven
Firmly waulked, and tightly locked
Ne’er can he be loosened
From us till he is cut away.

20.Cleas na mna-siùbhla
Gheibh tuillinn mu m’ beir I a h-asad,
An ionad a bhith ‘n diùmb ris,
Gun dübail d’a fear a lasan.

Just as the wife in travail
Suffers ere her child’s delivered
Yet instead of turning from him
Her passion for her spouse is doubled.

21.Ged chuir sibh oirnne buarach
Thiugh-luaidhte, gu’rfalbh a bhacadh,
Ruithidh sinn cho luath
‘S na’s buaine na féidh a’ghlasraich.

Though on us you’ve put fetters
Tightly-fixed to stop us moving
Yet will we run as swiftly
More tireless than the deer on hillside.

22.Tha sinn ‘san t-sean-nàdur
A bhà sinn roimh am an achda,
Am pearsanna ‘s an inntinn,
‘S ‘nar rioghalachd, cha téid lagadh.

We’re still of our old nature
As were we ere the Act was passed
Alike in mind and persons
And loyalty, we will not weaken.

23.’S i ‘n fuil bha ‘n cuis’ ar sinnsreadh,
‘S an innsginn a bha ‘nan aigne,
A dh’fhàg dhuinne mar dhilib,
Bhith rioghail – O, ‘s sin ar paidir!

Our blood is still our fathers’
And ours the valour of their hearts
The inheritance they left us
Loyalty – that is our creed.

24.Mallachd air gach seòrsa
Nach deònaicheadh fòs falbh leatsa,
Cia dhiubh bhiodh aca comhdach
No comhrùisgt:, lom gu ‘n craicionn.

Cursed be every person
Who’s still unwilling to rise for thee
Whether he has clothing
Or though he be stark naked.
25. Mo chion an t-òg feardha
   My darling the young hero

   Thar fairge chaidh uainn air astar;
   Who left us to go o'er the sea

   Dùrachd bhlàth do dhùthcha
   Thy country's warmest wishes

   'S an urnuigh gun lean do phearsa.
   And prayers will follow thee. 100

26. 'S ged fhuair sibh làmh-an-uachdar
   And though you overcame us

   Aon uair oirn le seòrsa tapaig,
   Once through a kind of mishap

   An donas blàr ro 'bheò-san
   In devil a battle in his lifetime

   Ni'm Feòladair tuilleadh tapaidh.
   Shall again the Butcher conquer.
Appendix 2: Oran nan Casagan Dubha
Rob Donn

1. AMH Dhe leinn, a dháoine,
  C’uime chochošíshibh fasún,
  ’S nach eil a’ ghaibh de shaorsa
  Fiù an aodaich a chleachd sibh?
  ’S 1 mo bharrail mu’n eighe
  Tha ’n aghaidh f eilidh us asain
  Gu bheil caraid aig Tearlach
  Ann am Parlamaid Shasúinn

2. Faire, faire, Righ Deorsa!
  An ann an spors air do
  Déanamh achdachan ura
  Gu bhi th du blachadh ’n?
  Ach o’n ’s balaich gun uails’
  ’S fhearr am bualadh no ’n caomhnadh,
  ’S bidh n1 ’s lagha ’gad
  ’N uair thig a leithid a ris oirnn.

3. Ma gheobh do namhaid ’s do charaid
   An aon pheanas an
   ’S iad a dh’cirich ’nad
   Rinn an raghainn a
   Oir tha caraid maith cuil ac’
   A rinn tubh ris na dh ’earb ris,
   ’Sa’ chuid nach d’imich do’n Fhraing leis
   Fhuair iad pension ’n uair dh’fhalbh e.

4. Cha robh oifigeach Gaidhealach
   Eadar seairdean us coirneil,
   Nach do chaill a chommiss-íon
   ’N uair chaith ’m briseadh le firneart ;
   A mhued ’s a f huaríshibh an uíridh,
   Ged bu diombuan r’ a ol e,
   Bheir sibh ’m bliadhnu air ath-phileadh
   Air son uinneagán leosain.

5. Cha robh bliadhna ’na taic so
   Neach a sheasadh mar goilear
   Gun chommission Righ Breatuinn
   Gu bhith ’na chaipethin air onoír;
   Chaidh na ficheadan as diubh
   Nach do leasaich sud dolar,
   Ach an sgitir-saighdeadh dhachaidh
   Mar chu a dh’easbhuidh a choilear

---

Song to the Black Coats
Rob Donn MacKay

God be with us, my friends,
Why have you changed fashions,
Have you not e’en the freedom
To wear your own clothing?
From the cry ’gainst the tartan
And the hose, I am thinking
That a friend of Prince Charles is In the Parliament of England.

Beware now, King George,
Do’st thou mock thy supporters,
Making new regulations
To double their bondage?
But since they’re churls without honour,
Better strike them than spare them,
And fewer will serve thee
When the like again happens.

If thy Scots friends and foemen
Are to share the same hardships,
Then those who rose up against you the choice that was; For they’ve a good friend behind them
Who has helped his supporters,
And those who went not to France with him
Got pensions when he left.

There was no Highland officer
From sergeant to colonel,
Who lost not his commission
On their wrongful disbanding;
What last year you were given,
Though in drink it went quickly,
You’ll repay the next twelve months
In the tax on glass windows.

But a year back from now
One was not held a scholar,
Without King’s Commission
To be a captain with honour;
They ’re dismissed now in scores
Not the richer by a dollar
But chased off to their homes
Like a dog with no collar.
But if you agree truly
To your growing decadence,
Though you once were so regal,
Your tributes have increased;
Well such cowards do merit
To be seen a-lamenting,
Casting off your plaids from you
And to black coats a-taking.

Woe is me for thee, Scotland,
How thy reason is proved,
That the part thou hast chosen
Has been thy full ruin !
Greed the Government's read
In you all who've turned to it,
And a bait they have given
To set you in conflict.

The English have taken
Their chance to afflict you,
That you may not be counted
As warriors longer ;
But when you are lacking
Your arms and equipment,
You'll receive thorough searching,
And punishment quicker.

I am watching your trouble
As something unheard of,
The best part of your falcons
Are to kites now enchained;
But, if you are lions
Retaliate quickly,
And make your teeth ready
Ere your mouths have been muzzled.

When the enemy's threatening
 Comes again where it turned back,
Then 'tis my desire, comrades,
 You will be 'midst the number
Who've so Highland a spirit
That that wrong they'll remember;
Till you turn in the river
For it's deeper before you.

Now, young Prince Charles Stewart,
Thou 'rt the hope of all clansmen,
Who battled to crown thee
And set fire to the country;
They are like hidden serpents
That last year lost their venom,
But their fangs are preparing
To rise the day of thy coming.

Many a one now is praying
For thy coming, Prince Charlie,
That the yoke may he raised
From the forces in hardship;
Who still say in their hearts,
Though their tongues may deny it,
'Welcome, when we see thee
Back to Britain and Ireland.'

There is many a young hero
Who now lies in slumber,
"Twixt the braes of Strath Cluny
And the banks of Lochaber,
Who would go in thy cause
To claim crown and throne for thee,
And would bring back the kerns
To revenge for Culloden.

But, ye friends of the Court,
Is your wrath not awakened?
Or are your eyes open
To your humiliation?
Your reward's like the she-goat's
That will be milked to dryness,
And chased away in the autumn
With the cur-pack behind her.

If it be the worse sinner
Whose power should be shaken, as it not James the Seventh
Who proved his mind steadfast?
How could you condemn honour
Or give praises to folly?
'Twas his faith to his creed
That gave strangers the kingdom.
An Act has thrust on us
A King from Hanover,
A Prince we have 'gainst him
Whom the law is forbidding;
0 God above who shall judge us,
And hast seen all their failings,
Wilt thou then put forward
Whichever's least sinning

Tha mar nathraichean falaicht'
A chaill an earradh an uiridh,
Ach tha 'g ath-ghleusadh an gathan
G' eirigh latha do thiginn.

12.'S iomadh neach a tha guidhe
Ri do thiginn, a Thearlaich,
Gus an eireadh na cuinghean
Dhe na bhuidhean'.n tha 'n eiginn;
A tha cantuinn 'nan cridhe,
Ged robh an tioghaidh 'ga bhreugadh,
'Lan do bheatha gu t'fhacinn
A dh'ionnsaigh Bhreatuinn us Eireann.'

13.'S iomadh oganach aimsicht'
Tha an am so 'na chadal,
Eadar braighe Srath-Chluainidh
Agus bruachau
Rachadh 'n cuisibh mhic t'athar,
'S a chrun 's a chathair r'an tagradh,
'S a dh'ath-phileadh na ceathairn'
A dhioladh latha Chuil-ladair.

14.Ach, a chairdean na cuirte,
Nach eil a' chuis a' cur feirg' oirbh,
No 'n do dh'fhosgail Ur suilean
Gus a' chuis a bhith searbh dhuibh?
Bhidh ur duais mar a' ghabhar
A theid a bhleoghainn gu tarbha.ch,
'S a bhith 'r fuadach 'san f haghar
Us ruaig nan gadhar r'a h-earball.

15.Ma's e 'm pea.each as mutha
'S coir a chumhachd a chlaoidheadh,
Nach e Seumas an Seachdhamh
Dhearbh bhith seasmhach 'na inntinn ?
C'uim' an diteadh sibh 'n onoir
No bhiodh sibh moladh na daoidheachd?
'S gur h-e 'dhluitheachd d'a chreideamh
A thug do choigrich an rioghachd.

16.Fhuair sinn Rtgh a Hanobhar
Sparradh oirnne le h-achd e;
Tha againn Prionnsa 'na aghaidh,
Us neart an lag ha 'ga bhaicadh ;
0 Bhith tha thuas 'nad bhritheamh,
Gun chron 'san dhis nach fach' thuMur h-e th' ann, cuir air adhairt
An t-aon as lagha 'm bi 'pheacadh.

These original reports are archived in the National Archives of Scotland, but some of the details were reproduced in SRO (1973) Reports on the annexed estates, 1755-1769: from the records of forfeited estates preserved in the Scottish Record Office HMSO

“the Highland Dress and Disarming Acts have taken effect here, tho’ perhaps not so fully as on the other parts of this estate, for many corners of this barony lye so remote & divided from each other that very probably some fellows may presume to transgress where they can do it with impunity as there is no troops quartered among them, but the factor is hopeful that they are now more upon their guard as he has published repeated advertisements of their danger” (SRO 1973: 40)

There are further details of John Campbell’s life and career on the RBS website: https://www.rbs.com/heritage/people/john-campbell.html